

Winter Construction Completes Major School Renovations in Atlanta

(February 7, 2017) ATLANTA, GA – Winter Construction has completed major additions and renovations at two Atlanta schools: Crawford Long Middle School and William Boyd Elementary School. Winter Construction's completions represent its 13th and 14th projects for Atlanta Public Schools in a decade.

Winter's renovation of William Boyd Elementary is a complete makeover of the school. This update and transformation required the school's students and staff to be accommodated elsewhere while the work took place. The renovation relocated some exterior walls, reconfigured interior spaces and classrooms, replaced all of the existing stairwells, and updated the school's entrance.

At Crawford Long Middle School, Winter built a new administration wing, an auditorium building, and a three-story addition to the existing classroom wing. Winter renovated the existing gymnasium, converting the old stage into classrooms, refurbishing locker rooms and bathrooms, refinishing the gym floor with new graphics, replacing the bleachers, and installing new gym equipment.

Winter also reconfigured Long Middle School's entrance drive and drop-off area. The new entrance, along with the newly built additions, give the school a great new look. Winter completed its work while the school remained open.

Theondrae Reid served as project manager for Atlanta Public Schools on the Boyd Elementary School project. "Winter Construction's team at Boyd Elementary understood the needs of Atlanta Public Schools. They worked hard to provide the best product to benefit the students, staff, and administration."

Winter's Director of Education, Carrie Campbell, says that Winter has an excellent track record in K-12 school projects, often finishing ahead of schedule. "Our project teams at Winter are experts at meeting construction deadlines centered around the school year," said Campbell.

William Boyd Elementary reopened this in January in time for the second half of the school year. J.W. Robinson & Associates is the architect of record on the project. Long Middle School remained occupied during construction, and achieved substantial completion last October. BRPH Architects is the architect of record on the project.

Elsewhere in metro Atlanta, Winter Construction continues work on a new gymnasium and theater building at Alan Pope High School for Cobb County Schools.
